Shine, Sweep, Pity The Poor Pledge

By Willa Smith

Pledge, answer that phone! Pledge, have you finished waxing those floors? Pledge, help Mom in the kitchen:

Oh, its pledgie this and pledgie that and its anything you please, but pledgie ain't a blooming fool You bet that pledgie sees!

—and does!

Your Prexy says you go to some frat house to dine during Hell-Week, and although you're a shy little pledgie you go and dine on black-eyed peas and banans with the aid of a carving knife only. Every one knows that frat houses are one of the best sources of amusement—very amusing when two Greek sisters are sent to them and commanded to "speaketh not" but to "eateth plenty" to "washeth the dishes" and to "obeyeth the boys."

The boys, amazed at such silence from the feminine guests, order thanks to be given at supper by the gals—with gestures. After dinner speeches by the guests have to be written if pledges are dumb—not deaf! A contest is concocted for the visiting pledges, and the result is they eat dry—very dry—breakfast food with their noses, and develop hay-fever.

Some sweet-girl pledges look very lovely on a dance floor in the latest dance creation, but few have that girlish glow swathed in an apron—elbow deep in a dish pan and some frat brothers have mercy!

Anyway it's a great life if you obey orders, and there's always the thought that some day you can give the orders that "maketh the pledges squir."

Hey! Pledge, answer that door-bell!
